

*ZEN-BRAIN
REFLECTIONS*

James H. Austin, M.D.

Zen-Brain Reflections

The MIT Press
Cambridge, Massachusetts
London, England

Zen-Brain Reflections

Reviewing Recent Developments in Meditation and States of Consciousness

James H. Austin, M.D.

© 2006 Massachusetts Institute of Technology

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced in any form by any electronic or mechanical means (including photocopying, recording, or information storage and retrieval) without permission in writing from the publisher.

MIT Press books may be purchased at special quantity discounts for business or sales promotional use. For information, please email special_sales@mitpress.mit.edu or write to Special Sales Department, The MIT Press, 55 Hayward Street, Cambridge, MA 02142.

This book was set in Palatino and Frutiger on 3B2 by Asco Typesetters, Hong Kong.
Printed and bound in the United States of America.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Austin, James H., 1925–

Zen-Brain reflections : reviewing recent developments in meditation and states of consciousness / James H. Austin.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 0-262-01223-5

1. Meditation—Zen Buddhism—Physiological aspects. 2. Meditation—Zen Buddhism—Psychology. 3. Consciousness—Religious aspects—Zen Buddhism. 4. Zen Buddhism. I. Title.

BQ9288.A967 2006

294.3'422—dc22

2005052046

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

To my early teachers Nanrei Kōbōri-Rōshi, Myōkyō-ni, and Joshu Sasaki-Rōshi, for inspiration; to my wife Judy for her support; and to all those whose contributions to Zen, and to the brain, are reviewed in this book.

The test of a religion or philosophy is the number of things it can explain.

Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882)

Contents in Brief

	Contents in Detail	xi
	Chapters Containing Testable Hypotheses	xvi
	List of Figures	xviii
	List of Tables	xix
	Preface	xx
	Acknowledgments	xxii
	By Way of Introduction	xxiii
Part I	Starting to Point toward Zen	1
Part II	Meditating	27
Part III	Neurologizing	71
Part IV	Exploring States of Consciousness	227
Part V	Quickening	277
Part VI	The Absorptions	313
Part VII	Insightful Awakenings	327
Part VIII	Openings into Being; and Beyond to the Stage of Ongoing Enlightened Traits	389
Part IX	Pointing at Moonlight: Allusions and Illusions	403
	In Closing	457
Appendixes
A	Other Links between the Moon and Enlightenment in the Old Zen Literature	459

B	On Wilderness Poetry during the Tang and Sung Periods	462
C	Daio Kokushi "On Zen"	464
	Glossary	465
	References and Notes	475
	Source Notes	552
	Index	553

Contents in Detail

	Chapters Containing Testable Hypotheses	xvi
	List of Figures	xviii
	List of Tables	xix
	Preface	xx
	Acknowledgments	xxii
	By Way of Introduction	xxiii
Part I	Starting to Point Toward Zen
1	Is There Some Common Ground between Zen Experience and the Brain?	3
2	A Brief Outline of Zen History	4
3	Western Perspectives on Mystical Experiences	6
4	An Outline of the Path of Zen	7
5	The Semantics of Self	11
6	Developing Our Conscious Levels of Self	12
7	Some ABCs of the I-Me-Mine	13
8	Constructing Ourselves, Inside and Outwardly	15
9	Two Interpreters: One Articulate, the Other Silent	19
10	Dissolving the Psychic Self and Its Veils of Interpretation	21
11	Further Commentary on the Several Meanings of Zen-Brain "Reflections"	23
12	First Mondo	24
Part II	Meditating
13	The Attentive Art of Meditation	29
14	Just This	33
15	Meditative Attention: Accessing Deeper Avenues of Seeing and Hearing	37
16	Interpreting Synchronized Brain Waves	40
17	Some Gamma EEG and Heart Rate Changes during Meditation	48
18	EEG and Heart Rate Changes in Zen Meditation	51
19	Delayed Physiological Responses to Meditation	54
20	Breathing In; Breathing Out	58
21	A Quest for "No" Answers: Koan, Huatou, Jakugo, Mondo	61
22	The Roshi	64

Part III Neurologizing

23	Landmarks. Brain in Overview	73
24	Messenger Molecules: Some New Data	75
25	The Septal Region and the Nucleus Accumbens	79
26	The Wide Variety of Cingulate Gyrus Functions	82
27	The Amygdala as a Gateway to Our Fears	85
28	Expanded Roles for the Insula	95
29	Remembrances and the Hippocampus	99
30	The Well-Concealed Hypothalamus	108
31	GABA Inhibits; Glutamate Excites	110
32	Stress Responses within the Brain	113
33	Laid-Back Nurturing Promotes Laid-Back Limbic System Receptors	116
34	Peptides in Social Affiliative Behaviors: Oxytocin and Vasopressin	120
35	Our Brain's Own Opioids	123
36	Opioids, Acupuncture, and the Placebo Response	126
37	Metabolic Cascades That Transform the Next Nerve Cell's Firing Responses	137
38	Neurotrophins and Change	140
39	The Pineal and Melatonin	141
40	Cortical Anatomy by the Numbers	146
41	Where Is It? A Prelude to My Action. The Parietal Lobe	148
42	What Is It? The Temporal Lobe Pathway	152
43	What Should I Do about It? The Frontal Lobes	158
44	The Thalamus	167
45	The Pulvinar	175
46	The Reticular Nucleus and Its Extrareticular Allies	176
47	Higher Mechanisms of Attention	179
48	Ever-Present Awareness	184
49	Neuroimaging, EEG Tomography, Event-Related Potentials, and Caveats	187
50	Self/Other Frames of Reference; Laboratory Correlates?	193
51	Moving Away from the Self; Embodied Teachings	201
52	Neuroimaging Data from Different Studies of Self-Referent Functions	204
53	Imaging a Meditating Brain: A Commentary	214

Part IV Exploring States of Consciousness

54	Words and Metaphors in Religious Traditions	229
55	Multiple Meanings of "Taste"	232
56	Witnessing Awareness during Sleep (Continued)	237
57	Tilting the Emotional Set Point?	239
58	The Roots of Our Emotions	240
59	Attributing Different Emotions to Various Brain Regions	243
60	Conditioning: Learning and Unlearning	248
61	Addictions	251
62	Being in Love	255
63	The Male Animal: Libido and Ex-Libido	260
64	Cracks in the Bowl: The Broken Seal	265
65	Empathies, Mirror Neurons, and Prolonged Affirmative Attitudes	267
66	Through What Steps Does Ordinary Insight Transform Consciousness?	271
67	Second Mondo	275

Part V Quickening

68	The Remarkable Properties of Nitric Oxide	279
69	The Nitrous Oxide Connection	288
70	Self-Abuse by Drugs	291
71	How Do Certain Drugs "Alter" Consciousness?	297
72	Triggers	303
73	The Extraordinary Scope of Migraine: "The Hildegard Syndrome"	306

Part VI The Absorptions

74	The Varieties of Absorption	315
75	Space	323

Part VII Insightful Awakenings

76	Affirming One Reality: A Commentary on the Sandokai	329
77	Varieties of "Oneness" and "Unity." Category I: A and B	333
78	Varieties of "Oneness" and "Unity." Provisional Categories II and III	342

79	Varieties of “Oneness” and “Unity.” Provisional Category IV	351
80	Prajna: Insight-Wisdom	357
81	Words for the Inexpressible	358
82	Suchness and the Noumenon: An Allocentric Perspective	361
83	The Construction of Time	372
84	Disorders and Dissolutions of Time	378
85	Emptiness	383
86	Third Mondo	386
Part VIII Openings into Being; and Beyond to the Stage of Ongoing Enlightened Traits
87	Problem Words: “Pure Consciousness”; “Being”; “Cosmic”	391
88	Are There Levels and Sequences of “Nonattainment?”	394
89	Cultivating Compassion, a Native Virtue	396
90	On “Moral Cognition”	398
91	Some Aspects of Maturity That Are Nurtured during Long-Range Meditative Training	399
Part IX Pointing at Moonlight: Allusions and Illusions
92	Pointing toward a Late Lunar Phase of Objective Vision	405
93	A Contemporary “Taste of Kensho”: Its Profile of Early and Late Phenomena	407
94	How Our Brain Normally Perceives Light and Colors	410
95	Significance of the Late “Moonlight” Phase within the Whole Profile of Kensho	414
96	Significance of the Illusions at the Close of the Moonlight Phase	425
97	Some Cultural and Neural Origins of Moon Metaphors and Visual Symbols	432
98	The Hernandez Connection: A Darkened Sky and Moonglow	439
99	Other Ancient Fingers Pointing toward the Moon	440
100	People Differ in Their Response to Illusions: Psychological Considerations	447
101	People Differ in Their Susceptibility to Illusions	448
102	Fourth Mondo	452
	In Closing	457

Appendix A	Other Links between the Moon and Enlightenment in the Old Zen Literature	459
Appendix B	On Wilderness Poetry during the Tang and Sung Periods	462
Appendix C	Daio Kokushi "On Zen"	464
	Glossary	465
	References and Notes	475
	Source Notes	552
	Index	553

Chapters Containing Testable Hypotheses

It is a good morning exercise for a research scientist to discard a pet hypothesis every day before breakfast.

Konrad Lorenz (1903–1989)

These chapters suggest potential correlates between brain functions, meditative training, and the phenomena of alternate states of consciousness. Discard any that do not pass critical testing (at any time of day or night).

16	Interpreting Synchronized Brain Waves	40
20	Breathing In; Breathing Out	58
27	The Amygdala as a Gateway to Our Fears	85
29	Remembrances and the Hippocampus	99
33	Laid-back Nurturing Promotes Laid-back Limbic System Receptors	116
36	Opioids, Acupuncture, and the Placebo Response	126
42	What Is It? The Temporal Lobe Pathway	152
43	What Should I Do about It? The Frontal Lobes	158
44	The Thalamus	167
48	Ever-Present Awareness	184
50	Self/Other Frames of Reference; Laboratory Correlates?	193
51	Moving Away from the Self; Embodied Teachings	201
54	Words and Metaphors in Religious Traditions	229
60	Conditioning: Learning and Unlearning	248
62	Being in Love	255
68	The Remarkable Properties of Nitric Oxide	279
84	Disorders and Dissolutions of Time	378

101	People Differ in Their Susceptibility to Illusions	452
102	Fourth Mondo	457

List of Figures

Figure 1	An outline of the Path of Zen	8
Figure 2	The trialities	22
Figure 3	The left cerebral hemisphere	74
Figure 4	The right cerebral hemisphere, viewed from its inner surface	74
Figure 5	Stress responses within the brain	115
Figure 6	Neural correlates of reduced adult fearfulness; a response to early, "laid-back" nurturing	118
Figure 7	Brodmann's mapping by the numbers	147
Figure 8	The thalamus	168
Figure 9	The ordinary mental field of the physical self	317
Figure 10	The mental field of internal absorption with sensate loss	318
Figure 11	Parallel universes, transformed by insight into Oneness	340

List of Tables

Table 1	The Pejorative Self and the Direction of Its Transformation	14
Table 2	The Attentive Art of Meditation	30
Table 3	Opioids and Their Receptors	124
Table 4	Relationships between Frontal EEG Activities and Tendencies toward Different Patterns of Behavior	164
Table 5	The “Three Poisons” and Their Antidotes	241
Table 6	Some Neural Correlates of Maternal Attachment and Female Romantic Love	257
Table 7	Stress Responses Potentially Involved in an Episode of Internal Absorption	319
Table 8	Varieties of “Oneness”	343
Table 9	Relationships among the Terms for Mundane, Suchness, and Noumenon	365
Table 10	Beyond Mere Transitory States Lies the Stage of Advanced Practice	395
Table 11	A Succession of Earlier and Late Phenomena during “a Taste of Kensho”	415
Table 12	The Early Hallucination in Internal Absorption Differs from the Late Visual Illusions of Kensho	451

Preface

More wisdom is latent in things-as-they-are than in all the words men use.

Antoine de Saint-Exupéry (1900–1944)

Over a century ago, William James chose “Religion and Neurology” for the title of his first Edinburgh lecture, a series that evolved into his classic work, The Varieties of Religious Experience.¹ As this millennium began, Koenig and colleagues published their Handbook of Religion and Health. Its 768 pages cite evidence suggesting that a person’s religious orientation could benefit both brain and body.² Skeptics still wonder: can religion help our brains and bodies, and if so, how?

In late 1997, I sent off my manuscript of the earlier book that ventured to integrate Zen with the brain. Since then, countless books and journal articles have been published on separate aspects of neuroscience, Buddhism, and consciousness. For the present book I have selected pivotal areas in which to integrate these huge, separate topics.

This volume is no rehash. It takes up where the earlier book left off. Its new chapters address such questions as: How does acupuncture work? Can neuroimaging localize where our notions of self arise? How can brain imaging during meditation become more informative? Is there more than one kind of experience of “Oneness?” How do decades of meditative training and momentary enlightened states transform the physiology of the brain?

Requests for a less bulky sequel have been met by including far fewer source notes and references than were included in the 113 pages of reference citations of its 1998 predecessor.

Reflections occurs in the latest title for two reasons. First, “Reflections” represents a major update of the chapter in the first book entitled “Reflections on Ken-sho, Personal and Neurological.” Second, the new title serves also to introduce a major new section, part IX. These final chapters do more than explore ancient literary and artistic traditions that had linked Zen enlightenment with moonlight. They present novel interpretations. These arose when I rethought earlier personal experiences and reviewed the latest research. These are new reflections, based on data new and old. They envision links that I could never before have imagined between four diverse topics: migraine, metaphors, moonlight, and mysticism.

In the past, Zen has also had more than a fair share of unimaginably dense riddles. Herein, I try to clarify matters and demystify the subject. Do not be surprised when you encounter chapters uneven in texture which set old lines of historical evidence right next to new research data out at the very frontiers of neuroscience. I integrate topics when possible, but offer no final pat answers. As before, a few testable hypotheses are ventured. Page xvi lists the chapters that contain them.

Part I revisits a major Zen theme: our personal interior self. I ask: How do we relate our private self, both to other people and to other things that we think lie “outside” our self/other boundary? Part II highlights several preliminary studies of meditation. I examine both the limitations inherent in their design and those of neuroimaging methods in general.

Part III updates information about the brain, including the amygdala and other parts of the “old” limbic system. Here, I comment on recent research that clarifies its “paralimbic” extensions. Do not get bogged down in these 31 chapters. Lay readers are encouraged to skim them and move on to part IV, which explores states of consciousness. Part V considers some elementary expressions of these states and comments on how appropriate it is to use drugs to simulate them.

Part VI pays a brief visit to the superficial states called absorptions, leaving more room for part VII to revisit the later states that confer crucial insights. Zen refers to such insightful “peak experiences” as kensho and satori. Part VIII comments on still more advanced states of awakening that realize “Being,” then moves beyond to the rare ongoing stage. Only very few persons manifest this stage of “sage wisdom.”

Part IX is the new section just referred to. It reviews the old history of how “moonlight” came to be linked with kensho. Its personal reflections begin by focusing on an unusual late phase of “kensho.” This delayed “moonlight” phase has implications for the neurosciences, for Zen Buddhism, and for steering clear of the confusion caused by misidentifying genuine visual illusions as mere literary allusions.

Meditation, enlightenment, and consciousness are complex topics. The Path of Zen and its intricate interrelationships with the neurosciences call out for some temporary oversimplifications. Cast in this secular role, your author/guide invites you to peruse the simplified figures, tables, four (mondo) summaries, and glossary.

Also for the reader’s convenience, many topics here have been cross-referenced to pages in the earlier book. For example, when you come across a citation in brackets like [Z: –], it points you to relevant pages in Zen and the Brain that can serve as an introduction.

Why are samples of Zen poetry included? Because their verses often express meaning more accurately than do my words of prose.

Even so, the reader will find not only that the essence of Zen continues to elude words but that crucial facts in the neurosciences still remain to be discovered. We are still very early on that path toward which James was pointing, still straining to integrate the potentials latent in “religion and neurology” into that singular unification which Saint-Exupéry distilled into the phrase, things-as-they-are.

Acknowledgments

Professor Nick Gier kindly invited me to give several lectures in his course on Buddhism. Fortunately, this led to an invitation to teach an entire course entitled “Zen and the Brain,” and to my becoming formally affiliated with the University of Idaho. I am most grateful to him and to the Department of Philosophy for the opportunity this provided to access the library and interlibrary loan facilities of the university.

I also thank the many editors and program directors, now too numerous to list, who—because they invited me to write or speak at conferences—stimulated me to update and simplify the subject matter for the general audience.

This sequel is the direct result of my being invited by MIT Press to write a slender update of the first book. I now take this opportunity to thank Barbara Murphy, the neuroscience editor, for her constant encouragement, to thank Katherine Arnoldi Almeida for her skilled editorial assistance, and to thank Yasuyo Iguchi for her artistry in novel cover designs and illustrations.

I am especially grateful to Kathy Mallory for her ongoing patience and skill both in deciphering my handwritten revisions of her excellent typing, and in bringing the drafts of the manuscript to completion. Many thanks also to James W. Austin, Scott Austin, and Lynn Austin Manning for reviewing and commenting on the manuscript.

In recent years, as a member of Mountain Lamp Idaho, I have been privileged to share in the inestimable bounties of regular Zen practice with our local sangha, as well as in the retreats led by Eileen Kiera and Jack Duffy.

By Way of Introduction

Zen lies beyond the details of words and letters, outside mental conditions, in the inconceivable, in what ultimately cannot be grasped.

Eisai (1141–1215)¹

This is the second book in a quest for the inconceivable. Its author has been attempting to repair his ignorance in three major areas: (1) Zen—What is it? (2) The human brain—How does it actually function? (3) Meditation and enlightened states—What really goes on? And there is a fourth area we still need to know more about: How has the brain been transformed in the rare sage who has entered the late stage of ongoing enlightened traits?

Most chapters in this book are expressed as essays, yet some require the form of a personal narrative. All chapters reflect the personal biases of someone raised as a Unitarian, trained to solve neurological problems at the bedside, who then pursued clinical questions into the research laboratory.

By 1967, I had become fascinated with the psychology of the underlying creative process in biomedical research. So much so that I started to write about it.² I soon realized how little I knew about the basic physiology of creative intuition. When I began Zen training in Kyoto 7 years later, my ignorance was compounded. I knew nothing about what caused another flashing form of insight: the flash of enlightenment known as kensho or satori.

What else happens that steers an otherwise conventional academic neurologist in the direction of Zen? It may help to revisit an interview conducted in 1998. It addresses this and other questions related to the earlier book, entitled Zen and the Brain.

You came to Zen both as a medical doctor and as a practicing scientist. What attracted you to it?

Well, I encountered Zen by chance during my first sabbatical in Japan. I was first attracted to it by the aesthetic qualities of the Zen temples and gardens in Kyoto. I was also drawn to it because I had seen that Zen had shaped the cultural life of Japan in many influential ways. There was one final crucial factor: the opportunity to learn from Kobori-Roshi. He was a remarkable Zen master. His presence communicated the essence of Zen, and I could converse with him in English.

Did Zen largely challenge, or corroborate, what you knew from science?

It did both, at different times. At the outset, nothing in my previous medical or neuroscience training had prepared me for Zen. The challenge stimulated me to learn more—both about Zen and about the rapidly expanding frontiers

- click Demon's Door \(Jim Rook, Book 7\)
- Clinical Research: Case Studies of Successes and Failures online
- read The Inmates Are Running the Asylum: Why High Tech Products Drive Us Crazy and How to Restore the Sanity \(2nd Edition\)
- click The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy

- <http://korplast.gr/lib/John-Adams--A-Life.pdf>
- <http://wind-in-herleshausen.de/?freebooks/Absurdistan--A-Novel.pdf>
- <http://dadhoc.com/lib/A-Death-in-the-Family--A-Novel.pdf>
- <http://chelseaprintandpublishing.com/?freebooks/Is-There-Life-After-Football---Surviving-the-NFL.pdf>